Ultra-Modern Lines

Lines are all important, whether it is a hat, a gown, a house or a car you are selecting. A slight mistake in the lines may spoil the effect of the whole. The wrong tilt of a feather may ruin a hat. A misplaced window may destroy the entire charm of a residence. Lines are all important in designing a car. Few cars have ever been produced with lines which thoroughly satisfy a person of artistic taste. Most people agree that the Columbia Six is one of the few. Take the Sport Model for example. Because the lines are correct from an artistic standpoint—it is a car that grows on you from day to day. You will like it better the longer you have it. The unbroken lines from rear seat to the radiator—the beveled edged body—the radiator—the cowl and the top lines—they all satisfy.

They have that ultra-modern touch, the distinction and unusualness which causes people to turn and give the car a second look as it passes. And there is no denying the fact, that having a car which causes people to give it the second look, is perhaps the keenest enjoyment of car ownership. And best of all you will find the Columbia Six as thoroughly correct and good on the inside as it looks on the outside. Such exclusive mechanical features as the automatic motor temperature control and the non-synchronizing springs are exceedingly important. The former increases the motor efficiency by 30% and does away with all the trouble of hard starting, slow warming up and fussing with hood covers in winter. The latter makes the Columbia Six the easiest riding car in America regardless of weight or wheel base. Come in and see it. Then you will want to ride in it. That will make you want to own one.
